More About Our Process

The company believes that markets are inefficient in regard to differentiating between average and quality growth companies. Therefore, detailed bottom-up research is required to assess a broad range of factors and identify those companies with strong long-term potential.

With this fundamental conviction in the need for active portfolio management, William Blair utilises a bottom-up approach to stock selection that is based on on-the-ground research and disciplined analysis. Portfolio managers and analysts meet regularly with company management to discuss performance, long-term prospects, and future plans.

Discussions with company management and independent sources are supplemented by extensive financial modelling and valuation analysis to ensure that only stocks with the potential to deliver excess returns over the long term are selected.

Particularly notable is the highly collaborative approach taken by William Blair's experienced investment teams. Portfolio managers and analysts work in tandem to gauge the long-term growth prospects of individual securities, which are assessed using a broad range of fundamental factors to identify those companies offering the long-term potential for superior profitability, growth, and return on invested capital.
